MUSKOGEE, I. T., June 12.—Yesterday the dead body of a man concealed in a clump of bushes, was found near Okmulgee, thirty miles west of this place. Upon examination of papers found in the dead man's pocket, it was found that his name was J. H. Beatty, and his home was Southwest City, Mo. He had been to Oklahoma and, as it appears, was interested in a grocery store in Oklahoma City. There were two bulket holes in his wrists and one in his temple. The supposition is that he awas murdered for money, and the wagon and team in which he was traveling was not taken by the perpetrators of the deed. It has since been learned that Mr. Beatty had a family in southwest Missouri and was possessed of considerable property. able property.

GRAND JURORS IMPANELED TO TRY

He said that Klepper was tried under an act of 1845, but Sullivan's petition was based on the habeas corpus act of 1874; besides there was no provision for the reporting of testimony. Mr. Trude said it was grossly improper to admit in testimony the deposition of a deceased person as was done. The inner workings of a dead man's mind were allowed to be brought before it, not only what he said but what he suspected. Such evidence would not be sanctioned in a court of justice. These statements went out to people who did not know that the evidence was not evidence at all. For instance, a man named Dillon, who said it was right to murder men in England, but not right to murder men in America, gave evidence of Sullivan's alleged speculations through Lester, and it was brought in that Sullivan had something to do with Cronin's murder. Surrounded with Sullivan's enemies the jury imbibed all this irrevalent and improper evidence based upon suspicion, surmise and conjecture and found a verdict againts him for murder. The bill of rights which guaranteed the inalienable rights of citizen provided that unless there were positive proof, or as strong presumption of guilt, the accused should not be held in imprisonment. Sullivan had made no effort to run away; he had been at home at night and in his office by day and he was not a fugitive who had been brought back from some state to which he had fled. Mr. Trude referred to the "night scavengers" who had been around trying to collect evidence against the accused.

The practice is, if the state's attorney desires to question the question of the sufficiency of the petition he should move to quash the writ. That is the only way to get the matter in form. It appears to me it would be a hardship to require a prisoner to get a copy of the testimony before coroner's jury before he can sue to regain his liberty. I don't know whether the coroner's jury is exceedingly indefinite. It finds that these prisoners were either guility of the murder or had guilty knowledge of it. It finds neither one thing nor the other. It might have been sufficient evidence to hold the accused. I think that is due in view of the indefiniteness of the vertict. The only question I have to determine is whether there is sufficient evidence to hold Alexander Sullivan without bail.

Then the court suggested that if Mr. Sullivan were not satisfied to leave the matter entirely with him he could cross examine certain witnesses on the stand, but the state's attorney would be allowed to also put in evidence. Thereupon Mr. Trude consulted with his client. Mr. Sullivan thereupon promptly agreed to leave the evidence with the court and decide if it were sufficient to hold him.
